Some hands present several options to declarer and he must weigh each of them before deciding which path to take. A lot of declarers went wrong with this hand.

BIDDING: North was too strong to open 1NT but had an easy raise to game.

PLAY: West led his fourth best diamond and declarer won the second round in dummy. The carding told declarer that West had either five or six diamonds so the contract was in danger. If the two missing aces were split, South would have to guess which ace West held and attack it. Then (if the diamonds were 5-3) when East won the other ace, he would have no diamond to return. If East held both aces, there was no problem but if West held both aces, declarer could go down. Then declarer saw a possible solution...he came to his hand with a club and led a low spade. When the king won, declarer switched to hearts and easily wrapped up nine tricks. If West had gone up with the spade ace to lead another diamond, declarer could still make the hand if the spades were 3-3 or the ace of hearts was with East. Note that playing hearts first will not work.

In a local game, seven pairs went down while six made the contract. But four of those six successful pairs made overtricks so I can only assume it was played by North and East did not find a diamond lead.

Some bridge addicts have been known to dream about hands they may or may not have played. This happened to me last night. Was this a pleasant dream or a nightmare?

BIDDING: The bidding was bold to say the least. In my dream, I was North and made a simple takeout double that seemed to excite South. I was surprised we weren't doubled.

PLAY: West led a diamond and all of a sudden I was sitting in the East chair. Declarer won the ace of diamonds and played the ace of spades. Next there was another diamond from dummy ruffed by South. He then drew trumps followed by the ace of hearts. I was alert and did not want to be end-played so I dropped the king under the ace. I knew that if declarer held the queen of hearts, he would have finessed. South next led a low heart from his hand and I found myself in the West chair. I quickly rose with the queen of hearts to swallow up my partner's jack. I had always wanted an opportunity to use the "crocodile coup" and it finally presented itself. I then cashed the ten of hearts and led the queen of clubs to beat the contract. Note that if I don't rise with the heart queen, my partner is end-played into leading a club or giving a ruff-sluff to declarer.

Just as I was waiting for partner, the opponents, and the many kibitzers to applaud my magnificent defense, I woke up. I knew I had played the hand in the evening session so I found my convention card to see the actual result. Had I really defended so well? The answer staring back at me was that I was North and had doubled 4D and they made it for -710 and a zero.

Oh well, only three more hours until the alarm. If I could only get back to sleep.

The splinter bid is a valuable tool. With one bid you can show support for partner, game or greater strength, and shortness in the bid suit. North used the splinter here to reach a good slam with only 27 high card points in the combined hands.

*Splinter bid

BIDDING: I was sitting in the North chair and after hearing partner's 1D bid, I decided the two most important messages I could give partner were good diamonds and heart shortness. We play four of the agreed minor is Roman Keycard Blackwood so my 5C response showed two keycards plus the queen of diamonds. South next bid 5NT to see if I had an outside king and my 6D bid said no.

PLAY: West was reluctant to give up a trick so he led a trump. My partner quickly realized he would have to lose at least one spade so the club finesse must be on. He won the diamond in dummy, drew another round of trumps, and led the queen of clubs ducked by East. Another club went to the ace followed by the ace of hearts and a heart ruffed in dummy. Dummy's club jack was now ruffed in hand and his last heart was ruffed in dummy. Partner now end-played West by leading a low spade to the nine. West had to return a spade or give a ruff-sluff.

South could have taken two spade finesses needing only one to succeed but by first eliminating the round suits, he guaranteed the contract. This is another example of taking the finesse you must but avoiding all others.

#4

A good defender must always be alert for ways to defeat the contract. Sometimes it may even require trumping your partner's good trick. Take a look at this hand.

BIDDING: The power of the spade suit strikes again. East had good distribution but weak suits and the vulnerability kept him out of the auction. West had a good hand but was unable to bid again over 4S.

PLAY: West led the ace of diamonds and continued with the king. Declarer thought he would have no problems with the contract. He would win the third trick, draw trumps, discard a heart loser on the king of clubs, and trump all of his losing diamonds in dummy. However, East saw that his partner would have no good continuation at trick three so he ruffed the king of diamonds and put the queen of hearts on the table. Declarer was quickly down one. South smiled weakly and said "nice defense".

It was little consolation that East-West were cold for 4H; declarer knew many would succeed in 4S and he was getting a below average score.
