Bridge is such a fascinating game. Sometimes everyone at the table makes bids that fall under the umbrella of acceptance but in the end, someone must pay. Take a look at this hand.

Scoring: Matchpoints (Pairs)

BIDDING: I was sitting South and although my hand had only nine high card points, it begged to be opened. West made a "lead directing" overcall that might be considered light when vulnerable. North made a normal bid and East couldn't believe all of the bidding but contented herself with an invitational raise. Although I had opened with few honor cards, my distribution demanded another bid so I showed the club suit. Partner took a preference to hearts and East could not contain herself and doubled.

PLAY: Since leading an ace is usually a bad lead, West led the jack of diamonds. The rest was easy; I played the king and ruffed East's ace. Next, I ruffed a club to dummy and discarded my spade on the queen of diamonds. I then led hearts and made five when that suit behaved. Poor East said to her partner: "You overcalled and I had three aces". It's difficult to attach blame to anyone on this hand. I opened light, West overcalled light, North's bid was reasonable, and poor East had "three aces". Isn't this a great game?

When the game is scored at matchpoints (pairs), players will take many risks to play 3NT rather than five of a minor. Here is a good example.

*Natural with 10+ support points

BIDDING: Playing a five-card major system, South opened the bidding with 1D. Sitting North and looking at my own long diamond suit, I had a couple of options. I could jump to 3S to show a game going hand with diamond support and shortness in the spade suit. But, I finally decided to not give the opponents too much information and instead made a forcing raise in diamonds. Next, South bid 2NT showing 12-13 points and stoppers in the other suits. Hoping to provide at least seven tricks, I raised to game.

PLAY: West led a low heart and declarer quickly wrapped up eleven tricks for +460. Those N/S pairs who bid to a pedestrian 5D, scored only +400. It's true if West had found the ace of clubs lead (or a spade lead with a club shift), the defenders could take the first nine tricks. In a team event where overtricks are less important, it would make sense to reach the minor suit game. But, as you can see, taking chances at matchpoint scoring can pay off.

However, that +460 only earned us ten of twelve matchpoints. One N/S pair was doubled in 5D for +550 and another pair was doubled in 4D and made two overtricks for +710. Matchpoints is a tough game!

Some contracts offer few chances for success but this declarer saw a slim possibility and played accordingly. It's a good example of not giving up even when the prospects are dim.

BIDDING: South's hand was top heavy with aces and kings so he leaped to game after his partner's raise.

PLAY: West led his singleton club and declarer played the jack covered by the queen and ace. South saw four potential losers: one heart, two diamonds, and one club. He hoped to eliminate a loser with a 3-3 club division or some sort of end play. He drew trumps in two rounds and then played the king of clubs. He was disappointed when West showed out but he continued with a third round. East won and played the king of diamonds. Declarer won this trick and followed with a heart to dummy's ace. South then ruffed dummy's last club and played his last heart. The defender who won the heart would have to lead a diamond or allow declarer to ruff in one hand and discard a diamond from the other. East won the diamond queen, but it was over for the defense. East's forced return of a club or heart allowed declarer to sluff his diamond and make his contract.

An opening diamond lead would probably defeat the contract. Declarer could still succeed by end playing East for a club return away from the queen but it would be a difficult play to find. As for declarer, he saw the possibility of a blocked diamond suit and took advantage of it.

Having the right conventions in your arsenal can make it easier to reach the optimum contract. Here is a good example.

*Forcing spade raise

Heart shortness

BIDDING: South had a fair hand that became great after North responded 2NT. This was a conventional bid (Jacoby 2NT) that showed four+ spades along with values for at least game. South's rebid showed a singleton or void in the heart suit. Their agreement was that North would sign off in game if the shortness bid was a turnoff. Accordingly, South used Roman Keycard Blackwood to discover his partner held the ace, king, and queen of spades and bid the slam.

PLAY: West led the top two hearts and South quickly wrapped up twelve tricks. The heart shortness was the key to the slam. Just imagine the South hand with a small doubleton heart to appreciate the value of this. Same high card points but a much weaker hand. Also, the Roman Keycard convention eliminated South's concern about trump quality. Do you have the tools to bid this slam?
