Here's another example of a convention that can get you to the right slams and keep you out of the bad ones.

*Exclusion Blackwood

BIDDING: North's best rebid was a raise of his partner's spades. Raising with only three cards is acceptable holding honor third along with shortness in a side suit. After hearing the diamond bid and the spade raise, South leaped to the five level in hearts. This was the Exclusion Blackwood convention asking for the number of aces OUTSIDE of the heart suit. North showed two aces and South bid the grand slam.

PLAY: There was nothing to the play with declarer quickly claiming thirteen tricks. It's clear to see that standard Blackwood would not have helped in the auction. The response of two aces would not have told South which aces North held. This is a convention you and your partners might want to consider.

#2

To be a competent declarer you must look ahead and anticipate problems. Take a look at this hand where the declarer failed to see what could go wrong.

Scoring: Matchpoints (Pairs)

BIDDING: South had a nice hand but took no action over his partner's raise.

PLAY: With no attractive lead, West attacked with the ace of clubs. Even though his partner discouraged with the five, West continued with a second round. Declarer counted five possible losers: 1 spade, 1 heart, 2 diamonds, and 1 club. He saw he could ruff a spade in dummy and possibly discard a diamond on dummy's good club. Since it was likely the opponents would switch to diamonds when they regained the lead, declarer immediately went to dummy's spade ace and discarded a diamond on the queen of clubs. Next he played three rounds of spades trumping the last one in dummy and then led trumps. East won the second heart and returned his last spade for West to ruff. Declarer made nine tricks but this was a pairs event and overtricks were important. Declarer erred by not playing his three top spades before ruffing his fourth one with dummy's nine of hearts. He should have realized leaving a fourth spade in his hand exposed him to a ruff. Careful play would have meant ten tricks for an excellent result.

Another item to note is the opening lead. It is usually wrong to lead an unsupported ace. You can see that any other lead allows the defenders to cash their four tricks before declarer can establish a discard on the club suit.

#3

It's important in a team event to avoid a double game swing. That's a game making each direction. When in doubt, it's usually right to "bid one more". Take a look at this exciting hand.

BIDDING: East opened an aggressive 4H preempt and South overcalled in spades. West wasn't sure who could make what but didn't like his hand for defense so he raised his partner. North had the same problem and closed the auction with 5S.

PLAY: West led a heart and declarer saw three possible losers: two diamonds and one club. Although it wasn't certain, South felt his best bet was to find West with both minor suit kings. He ruffed the opening heart lead, led a spade to dummy, ruffed a second heart, and then repeated this drawing trumps and eliminating hearts from both hands. He then led ace and another club and West was fixed. He had to win the club or declarer would only lose two diamond tricks. But, after winning the club he was end-played. He had to lead a diamond away from his king or lead another club allowing declarer to discard two diamonds on the good clubs. South was lucky but took advantage of the situation.

At the other table, North-South were down one in the same contract when declarer played East to hold the king of diamonds. Note that East-West have four losing tricks in a heart contract.

#4

When declaring a hand it's important to maintain control but when the trumps mis-behave, that can be difficult. Setting a goal for the number of tricks you need is one method of handling a bad situation.

*Weak

BIDDING: After West's preemptive raise, North made a takeout double. South showed his spade suit and North raised to game. This was a team event where it pays to bid the games.

PLAY: West's diamond lead was ruffed in dummy. The game looked safe as long as the trumps behaved. Declarer led the queen of spades which held the trick. Declarer noted the fall of the spade seven from West and suspected the 4-1 trump break. Since declarer only needed ten tricks, he simply started cashing his clubs and hearts allowing East to win his three spades. This limited the defense to just those three tricks and N-S chalked up their game. At the other table, declarer led a second spade and lost control with the 4-1 trump break.

In a team game it is correct to ensure the success of the contract. Playing a second round of trumps hoping to make an overtrick may be best in a pairs event, but in a team game it is most certainly not.
